CONGRESSIONAL

SPEECH OF MR. CLAY, OF KY.

In the Senate of the United States, Tuesday, July 27, 1841. Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, said, that the defect of having still continuing a branch which he alluded yesterday, &c.

But notwithstanding the urgent necessity of national bank, it will be well, on this side of the Senate, that the bill, as it is presented, should be amended, &c.

The result of the consultation to which he has referred, has been an amendment to the 16th fundamental rule, which he was about to propose, &c.

Two opposite opinions prevail as to the branching power. According to one, the previous action of the States is sufficient, &c.

To the opposite opinion held by our friends, we are disposed to go far to concede that the bank shall be allowed, in the first instance, to establish a branch in each of the States, &c.

entailed upon a remainder class. I would have been glad to see the question of the branch, &c.

According to the amendment, there is not one in which every element of discount and deposit may be established, &c.

What will be the practical operation of the amendment? The bank cannot be organized, &c.

These are the views, sir, (said Mr. C.) which he had taken of this deeply interesting question. He believed he shared them, with those friends who have hitherto acted with him, &c.
