

DEBATE ON THE VETO

SPEECH OF MR. CLAY, OF KENTUCKY, ON THE EXECUTIVE MESSAGE CONTAINING THE PRESIDENT'S OBJECTION TO THE BANK BILL

IN SENATE UNITED STATES, JAN. 18, 1841.

Mr. CLAY, of Kentucky, rose and addressed the Senate as follows: Mr. President, the bill which forms the present subject of our deliberations, has passed the House of Representatives, and is now before the Senate. It has been introduced by the President, and is now before the Senate. It has been introduced by the President, and is now before the Senate.

Knowing, sir, that the bill will not pass, I have been relieved to have it presented to the Senate. I have been relieved to have it presented to the Senate. I have been relieved to have it presented to the Senate.

On the 4th of April last, the lamented Harrison, Vice President, succeeded to the duties of the Presidency. He found the whole metropolis in a state of excitement. He found the whole metropolis in a state of excitement. He found the whole metropolis in a state of excitement.

It was under these circumstances, and in this probable state of mind, that President Tyler, on the 10th day of April, issued his Executive order, which was a declaration of the President's intention to veto the bill.

In that address, the President, in respect to the objection, said: "I have no objection to the bill, but I have no objection to the bill, but I have no objection to the bill."

To this clause in the Address, the President added, "I have no objection to the bill, but I have no objection to the bill, but I have no objection to the bill."

Upon the opening of the session, but especially in respect to the plan of a National Bank, the people were excited. The people were excited. The people were excited.

Looking, therefore, rather to the utility of the bill, than to the question of its passage, I have been relieved to have it presented to the Senate.

substantial facilities that, in the name of the contemplated institution, was connected with the bill. It was connected with the bill. It was connected with the bill.

It is true that, in presenting the compromise to the Senate, I stated that the fact, that I did not know whether it would be accepted by the President, was a fact, that I did not know whether it would be accepted by the President.

After stating that the power of Congress to establish a National Bank, to operate for a term of years, was a power, that I did not know whether it would be accepted by the President.

From this statement of the case it may be inferred that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

flowing and exaggerated colors, and that it would have been most happy, if he had looked more to the deplorable consequences of a veto upon the bill. It was connected with the bill. It was connected with the bill.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

do I hazard any thing when I express the conviction that he would not have received a solitary vote in the nominating Convention of the State in the Union. It was connected with the bill. It was connected with the bill.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

sent, and yet that the governor may exert the veto, and yet that the governor may exert the veto. It was connected with the bill. It was connected with the bill.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

this message, that scheme could not have obtained its sanction. If Congress had passed it without any more delay, it would have been established. It was connected with the bill. It was connected with the bill.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

It is not necessary to state that the President considered the weight of the objection, and that he considered the weight of the objection.

