en winter has passed, with its ice and its snow,
Its gloom and its sullen eadness, and the bright joyous Spring is here again,
With its mirth and its merry gladness.

No more need we fear the cold chilling blast, That dreary old Winter doth bring, For sweet is the totals and healthful the bree That come the lie flowers of Spring.

How beauteous is nature, so lovely, so bright; The earth with its carpet of green; Even the beasts as they brouse wear a satisfier

And man, as he walketh the green-mantled and man, as we warrend out of the carth, Or joins in the gay revelry, leems to wear on his face a bright joyous smile,

Which bath long been a stranger to me— For the sear of the Autumn is on my brow, And paled is the thin cheeks hue, And the Spring, though it change all living
