POETICAL.

A SERENADE.

BY L. T. LACT.

The moon is rising, hasie doar,
Just o'er the eastern hills,
Its merry says are dancing here
Upon the bubbling rifle;
Come forth to howers, ready made,
And hear our plaintive serenade.

And over our paintive screenies.

We've lutes and harps of merry sound,
To charm the list'aing ear;
The woody re-echo all around
Our notes so wild and clear;
We'll sing a song while bere we stay.
To charm the fleeting hours away.

To charm the feeting hours away.

We'll sing of love in mellow lays,

Of lover's joys and pains;

We'll tune our harps to sing thy praise,
In soft harmonilous strains:

The richest boon, the greatest prize,
Is wow in those lovely eyes.

If twee in those lovely eyes.

Cone fierth upon the dewy lawn,

And show the queen of night,

Her evisal in the brilliant dawn
Of eyes emitting light.

And while the zepbrys round thee play,

We'll sing our octeat, sweetest lay.

THE THUNDER STORM. Forth from the temper-broading west,
Uproll'd the gathering sterm;
And o'er the leavens, in darkness dress'd,
Spread its pottentious form;
While man, frail mortial of the dust,
Pausing, look'd opward with distrust.

The blast then came on rushing wing—
A few big rain drops fell—
A hush was on each living thing;
A deep and breathless spell
Rested upon the shadow'd earth,
Ere to is ire the cloud gave birth.

Again with fury came the gust, And th' recking forest rour, Leaves mingle with the whirling dust The tall trees are uptore; Or smitten by the lightning's flash, Amid the fearful tumult crash.

ting Thos.

With one unbroken mass of cloud,
The broad sky's mantled o'er;
And belching thunders, long and loud,
Round the black welkin roar;
While the red lightling's snakelike form,
Wreathes the dark foreload of the storni.

Unstall'd seems every sluice of heaven, And on the torrents rusb— But in the west the gloom is riven! 'Tis the' sunset's golden flush! And Love bids Beauty's glorious bow Upon the passing tempest glow.

THE COONS OF OLD LANCASTER. THE COONS OF OLD LANCASTER WAITEN FOR THE REAL TOWNSHIP CLAY CLUB. TUNE—"Old Dan Tucket."

The moon was shaining clear and bright, The stars in thousand gounsed the night, The stars in thousand gounsed the night, High on a rail of the way, or travel faster, Get out of the way, or travel faster, For we're the Coons of Old Lancaster

Now when against our good old Tip, The Lokies ran their spavined Rip, We wrote our name to thousands four, And now we'll pledge a thousand more. Get out of the way, &c.

When we went down to Baltimore, In numbers more than fifty score, We lined our ranks with blooming roses, Expressly meant for Lokies' noses. Get out of the way, &c.

But Lord the Lokies at the sight, At first grew red and then grew white, It fell on 'em like aguey weather, And knocked their trembling knees toge Get out of the way, &c. 'Tis said that roses thrive the best, When dirt around their root is pre Thus we, by Berks and York enclos Can beat 'em both, if so disposed. Get out of the way, &c.

We'll join through triumph and through To plant our trees in good Clay soil, And take this motto from the rose, Perfume for friends and thorns for foes. Get out of the way, &c.

Some Coons are grey and some are white, Some love play and some love fight, But in the thickest of the fray, We're always known to thump, away. Get out of the way, &c.

We'll pake poor Polk in every fight, And drive old Dallas out of sight, And shoot "Huzar, the stock is rising For Harry Clay and Freinghuysen!" Get out of the way, or travel faster, For we're the Coon of Old Lancaste

"Leave vain regrets for errors past, Nor cast the ship away, But nail your colour to the mast, And strike for Harry GLAY."

I'll do my best from first to last, To poke the Polk away, My songs shall swell the bugle blast, And then I'll vute for CLAY.
